

RESEARCH SUPPORT SERVICES

As an Academic Medical Centre, the National University Hospital within the National University Health System has a significant role to play in medical research. As such, the Department of Laboratory Medicine aims to support its clinician researchers through National University Hospital Referral Laboratory (NRL) in supporting their studies. This may be in the form of testing for routinely available tests, or it may be in the form of tests arranged in collaboration with the relevant research groups and performed in the Department. This support will be based on a fee for service and economic batch testing for non-service tests.

The staff at NRL will receive your enquiries
